

EBBA SOFA I

"In ancient Greece, Chronos was the lord of time, the force that moves everything, that no one can stop and no one can escape.

Every day I meet him in the mirror. I see him in my face, in my gaze, in the small traces the years leave on us. A mirror is the most honest witness of time. It shows us, morning after morning, that we are always changing.

And yet, there is another kind of time. The time of marble.

Marble is born deep within the earth, from stone transformed by pressure and heat over millions of years. It holds within its veins the memory of ancient seas, of mountains rising and falling, of a time so vast that our lives are only a breath within it. It does not age. It simply endures.

CHRONOS brings these two times together. The mirror reflects the passing moment, the fleeting time we live. The stone that holds it carries the immemorial time of the earth. One changes. The other remains.

I wanted to create a piece where time passes, yet the object stays untouched by it, like the stone it was carved from. A piece that will reflect generations, and remain.

Time moves. CHRONOS endures."
