

RIVER ECHOES TABLE

"I have spent hours watching water run over the stones of a river. Nothing about it seems to change. And yet, year after year, the current keeps touching, polishing, insisting, until the stone surrenders its sharp edges and finds its true shape, soft, rounded, serene.

We are made the same way.

Time passes over us like water. Every experience, every loss, every joy shapes us a little more. Slowly we lose what is rough and become who we really are, with our own form, our own character, our own quiet strength. Nobody is born finished. We are polished by life.

This table is a tribute to that patient work. I drew its curves from the river stones, smooth and gentle, holding the memory of all the water that shaped them. I carved it in stone because only stone can tell this story honestly, it is the material that knows how to wait.

Rest your hand on its surface.
You will feel the river that is still flowing, and perhaps the years that made you who you are."
