

VORTEX AMARANTHO SIDETABLE

"Deep in the Amazon grows a rare tree whose heart is purple.

When it is cut, the wood is pale and quiet. Then, touched by air and light, it slowly awakens and reveals a colour that seems impossible in nature, a living violet, the colour mystics have always associated with spirit and transformation.

I knew this wood had to carry the memory of water.

It grew in the greatest river basin on Earth, drinking the rain of the rainforest for centuries, rising through the humid air toward the light. Its rings keep that story, the way the canyon walls keep the story of the ancient oceans. Water raised this tree. Water shaped the stone that inspired this piece. Here, both memories meet.

I drew its form from the vortices that carved the canyons over millennia, swirling currents turning and turning until the rock became a frozen wave.

I shaped it following the proportions nature uses to build everything that endures, guided by sacred geometry, the hidden order behind a shell, a wave, a whirlpool. Its scale is felt, never noticed.

It is a piece of rare wood and rare presence.

Touch it, and you will feel the pulse of the forest and the echo of the ocean that once was."
