

VERTEX CONSOLE

"I walked through ancient canyons where immense rivers, seas and oceans once lived.

The water has long gone, yet the stone remembers. In its walls I saw the traces of vortices, the swirling currents that, turning and turning for millennia, carved the rock into waves frozen in time. Every curve, every layer remains written there, a silent memory of what once flowed.

This console was born from that memory.

I shaped it following the proportions nature uses to build everything that endures, guided by sacred geometry, the hidden order behind a shell, a wave, a whirlpool. I conceived its scale for the human body, so you never notice it. You simply feel it belongs, as if it had always been there.

I dressed it in black, the colour of depth. The black of the ocean floor, of the night sky, of the stone at the bottom of the canyon where the light barely reaches. In that darkness, every curve and every shadow reveals the movement of the water.

Placed at the threshold of a home, it welcomes you with the echo of an ancient current.

Touch it, and you will feel the ocean that once was."
